Greek Composition for Schools Robert Johnson Bonner 2017-05-31 Excerpt from Greek Composition for Schools: With Exercises Based on Anabasis I-III, College Entrance Papers, and Original Selections For practice in conversation a few questions in Greek are appended to each of the exercises on Books I and II. The limitations of space made it impossible to add more; but similar questions can easily be framed by teachers who are interested in this sort of work. The Supplementary Exercises, consisting of entrance examination papers of leading American and Canadian universities and selections from literary sources, are liberally annotated. The latter exercises have been selected from a larger number that were thoroughly tested for several years with classes preparing for admission to college. The notes consist chiefly of recasts of idiomatic phrases into language suitable for literal translation into Greek and of references to the first four books of the Anabasis for words and phrases. In this way the student is obliged to make some effort of his own before he can avail himself of the assistance given. The occasional reading of a few sentences in Greek in the midst of composing can not fail to be helpful and stimulating. These pieces of real English it is hoped will prove a welcome change to both teacher and student. It is recommended that the Supplementary Exercises be not deferred too long. My experience has been that they can be translated with profit by a class whose vocabulary is limited to the first book of the Anabasis. It was found that more real progress was made, for, instead of imitating and copying, the students were obliged to think for themselves. One of the most serious difficulties that the teacher of Greek has to cope with is the paucity of the average student's English-Greek vocabulary. To render the acquisition of a vocabulary comparatively easy, the chief words and phrases of the Anabasis are classified under thirty-nine heads. The association of similar expressions will facilitate the process of memorizing. No great difficulty will be experienced in committing the bulk of the Word lists to memory, as a large proportion of the words already form part of the student's English-Greek vocabulary, after he has read several books of the Anabasis. However, the Index will render it possible to use the Word lists in connection with the Supplementary Exercises without memorizing them. National College Entrance Exam in China Yu Zhang 2016-01-29 This book focuses on the National College Entrance Exam (NCEE), an important measurement of education quality in China, from both education economics and education policy perspectives. It provides a better understanding and stimulates more sophisticated evaluations of NCEE-related policies in China from the perspectives of education equity, the effectiveness of education input, and education quality. This book reports inspiring findings based on high-quality individual level data, innovative measurement design, and various appropriate identification strategies. The most important conclusion is that both education equity and quality can be achieved using well-designed policies based on solid empirical evidence. This is likely the first book published in English to discuss the NCEE so extensively from multiple perspectives using concrete evidence.

If you've looked at most of the guides, they're thick and overwhelming and have the sense of being lectured at by a teacher who's telling you to put your hand down because they're not taking any questions. HOW TO SLAY THE ACT is the complete opposite of that. The author's years as a one-on-one tutor are apparent because it feels like you have someone sitting beside you, explaining strategies and test components in a way that has clearly been honed from having to continually clarify the message for a kid struggling with the concept." Survey of College Entrance Exam Preparation Methods Robin Donaldson 2013 This study surveyed college freshmen to determine which types of preparation if any they had before taking either the SAT and/or ACT to decide if a certain type of preparation increased their scores. Students indicated whether they used online resources, self-help resources, school workshops and/or private tutoring before taking either test. The ACT scores were converted to SAT scores so that the data would be uniform. The mean SAT score was computed for those who used preparation and those who did not and comparisons were made. Each individual type of preparation was compared to no preparation. Finally, a correlation was computed between SAT scores and high school grade point averages. The research did not show that students who used preparation performed better than those who did not.

A College Entrance Essay Exam Intervention for Students with Disabilities and Struggling Writers Amber Beth Ray 2017 High school students with high-incidence disabilities and struggling writers face considerable challenges when taking high-stakes writing assessments designed to examine their suitability for entrance to college. I examined the effectiveness of a writing intervention for improving these students' performance on a popular college entrance exam, the writing assessment for the ACT. Students were taught a planning and composing strategy for successfully taking this test using the Self-Regulated Strategy Development (SRSD) model. A randomized control trial was conducted where 20 high school students were randomly assigned to a treatment (N = 10) or control (N = 10) condition. Control students received ACT math preparation. SRSD instruction statistically enhanced students' planning, the quality of their written text (including ideas and analysis, development and support, organization, and language use), the inclusion of argumentative elements in their compositions, and the use of transition words in written text. Limitations of the study, future research, and implications for practice are discussed.

Just Above the Exam Cutoff Score Ruixue Jia 2021 A burgeoning literature has documented the importance of elite colleges. Yet, little is known about access to elite education and its labor market implications in China, a country that produces one in every five college graduates in the world. College admission in China is governed by a single exam—the national college entrance exam, and the government sets admission cutoff scores for elite colleges. We examine the impacts of scoring above the elite-tier cutoff on a student's access to elite colleges and wage outcomes after graduation, using the discontinuity around the cutoff score. By employing hand-collected survey data, we find that scoring above the cutoff not only increases the chance of entering an elite college but also raises a young person's first-job wages after graduation. We also find that those just above the cutoff have peers with higher scores and better social networks than those below the cutoff, but it is less clear whether the two groups use their time differently in college.

Meritocracy and Its Discontents Zachary M. Howlett 2021-04-15 Meritocracy and Its Discontents investigates the wider social, political, religious, and economic dimensions of the Gaokao, China's national college entrance exam, as well as the complications that arise from its existence. Each year, some nine million high school seniors in China take the Gaokao, which determines college admission and provides a direct but difficult route to an urban lifestyle for China's hundreds of millions of rural residents. But with college graduates struggling to find good jobs, some are questioning the exam's legitimacy—and, by extension, the fairness of Chinese society. Chronicling the experiences of underprivileged youth, Zachary M. Howlett's research illuminates how people remain captivated by the exam because they regard it as fateful—an event both consequential and undetermined. He finds that the exam enables people both to rebel against the social hierarchy and to achieve recognition within it. In Meritocracy and Its Discontents, Howlett contends that the Gaokao serves as a pivotal rite of passage in which people strive to personify cultural virtues such as diligence, composure, filial devotion, and divine favor.

Gender Gap Under Pressure Xiqian Cai 2016 This paper examines how female and male examination performance are differentially affected by the degree of competitive pressure faced. Our setting is China's National College Entrance Exam (Gaokao) which is widely regarded as the world's most competitive exam. We show that compared to male students, females underperform on the high-stakes Gaokao, relative to their performance on the low-stakes mock examination held two months earlier. The gender gap in exam scores is 0.15 standard deviations larger in the Gaokao relative to the mock exam. This translates to a 15% decline in the probability that females qualify for a Tier 1 university when moving from a low-stakes setting to a high-stakes setting. To elaborate on the possible mechanisms, we conduct two further analyses. First, for subgroups of students where the stakes matter more, the performance gaps are larger, and we observe a decline in performance among females, coupled with an improvement in performance among males. Second, we find that, compared to males, females perform worse on the afternoon exam in response to negative performance shocks on the morning exam.

Fear of the unknown and a general lack of confidence seem to paralyze their powers. Some gradually recover their wits, but too late to answer all the questions in the given time.
